Simulated robots are evolved in a virtual environment. This approach can illuminate the ultimate mechanisms of behavior: what environments and selection pressures favor particular useful morphological and neurological structures?